GAO discussed strategies to curb Medicare spending, which has grown by over 10 percent a year since 1989, twice the rate of the national economy. GAO noted that: (1) Medicare has not used tools used by private health care payers to manage and improve its utilization, reimbursement, and claims policies and procedures; (2) Medicare's smaller categories of services, which are typically less managed and monitored, have displayed much higher growth than its larger categories of services; (3) the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) has been slow to address overpricing and overutilization problems, sometimes taking years to adjust excessively high payment rates; (4) strict statutory constraints and its own burdensome regulatory and administrative procedures hinder HCFA from using such private-sector management tools as case management, preferred providers, or discount negotiation; (5) in an effort to change its role from claims processor to prudent manager, HCFA has initiated demonstrations to explore its use of competitive bidding for certain supplies, case management, and preferred providers; and (6) proposed legislation could give HCFA the funding and flexibility it needs to better manage its contractors and services. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
