Excerpt: . rot, and their crimes live for ever against them! The crimes in question were combination against the truth, and opposition unto holiness, figuratively deserving the highest punishment that could be awarded. In that strange, shameful, and scarce book, Le Moyen de Parvenir, by Beroalde de Verville, it is recorded that when Charles V. made his entry into Douai, the inhabitants set up triumphal arches and like embellishments. At the last moment they bethought themselves of a wretch who was gibbeted hard by the gate of the principal entrance. Him they therefore dressed in a clean white shirt, to do honour to the emperor.¹ It will be noticed that they did not take the body away, which would have been easier; that would have been illegal. ¹ Quand l'Empereur Charles y fit son entree; les gens de cette ville-la lui voulurent faire tout...
