He has been connected with this College in the capacity of tutor, professor, and president, in all, seventeen years. He died full of years and honors; and at his funeral in the Chapel, the great interests of a great country were represented in her eminent sons, paying the last tribute of respect to one who had done much in behalf of those interests. V-P , . TO. They tell me when the solemn hour Was nigh; when coursed the blood with feeble pace, Beneath the fell destroyers power, --A smile came oer thy face. And when the chilly hand of Death Was on thy brow, and lifes last feeble rill Was frozen with his icy breath, That sweet smile lingered still. As when the sunlight quits the earth, And leaves Its traces on the faded day; So, when thy bright soul gained its birth, It kissed thy mortal clay. J. JUVENAL. --A FRAGMENT. Sat. VI. , vs. 1-25. I Think, that, in the ancient golden years Of Saturns reign, Virtue long dwelt on earth; When frigid caves both flock and shepherd held In common shelter round one common hearth. With skins of neighboring beasts, and branches green, The mountain wife her rustic couches spread, --Not, Cynthia, like thee, --nor thee, whose eyes So bright are darkened by a sparrow dead, --But rearing sturdy sons, a lusty horde,...
